chairs for the magistrates and secretaries, covered also with black cloth, are elevated two steps above the floor, and painted black. Various engines of torture, some of which are stained with blood, hang round the room. When the criminals suffer, the candles are lighted; for the windows are shut close, to prevent their cries being heard abroad. Two crucifixes are presented to the view of the unhappy objects. But it is too shocking to relate their different modes of cruelty. Even women are not spared.

NURENBURG. At Nurenburg, the prison is under the town-house. There are fifteen steps down to the gaoler's kitchen. The apertures for admitting light into the passages of the dungeons, are level with the ground. This is one of the worst prisons I ever saw. The dark unhealthy dungeons, and the dismal torture-chamber, do no honour to the magistracy of this city. The gaoler makes use of a low trick to prevent the escape of his prisoners, by terrifying them with the apprehensions of falling under the power of witches. In several of the German gaols there are dungeons for those that are accused of witchcraft, but they seem to have been long disused; and I hope increasing light and good sense will soon entirely banish the fears of witches, and consequently the witches themselves.

Over the gate of the house of correction at Nurenburg is this inscription:

Hic criminum frequentia
Mortalium dementia
Compescitur clementia
Salva fori sententia.

The prisoners were employed in grinding spectacle-glasses. The surplus of what they earn above forty creutzers, or eighteen-pence a week each, they are allowed for themselves. The men grind seven glasses in each hand. Some grind four hundred in a week, by which they earn fifty-two creutzers at thirteen for a hundred, and consequently each earns for himself twelve creutzers a week.[1] Some of the women were working gold and silver lace on cushions.

SCHWABACH. At Schwabach, in the margraviate of Anspach, is a large house of correction, in which were ninety-three prisoners. Some men here also were grinding glasses in two large rooms;

[1] That this is a very unhealthy business, is evident from the countenances of those whom I saw thus employed, and from the disagreeable sensations I always received from the dust in the rooms where they were grinding. The medical gentlemen prescribe bleeding and physic to these persons, two or three times a year.

and others, in different apartments, were employed in polishing steel buttons for clothes, wire-drawing, and making spinning-wheels: and I was informed that twelve were at work on the road. The women were spinning, the daily task enjoined to each was six creutzers, or twopence halfpenny.

The greatest attention to cleanliness is inculcated; bathing-rooms are provided for the prisoners; and the expense of washing for them is reckoned an object not to be regarded. The necessity for sick wards for both sexes is pointed out.

It is remarked to be "a very false notion, that a man who lives upon bread and water can work hard and be kept in health"; accordingly, a daily allowance of hot provisions is ordered for the criminals.

It is mentioned as an essential point to preserve order, and prevent abuses, "that one of the city magistrates should every week in rotation visit the house, and closely inspect everything relative to its management."

BAYREUTH. In a large house of correction near Bayreuth, in Franconia, the men were all working on marble, which is found in the neighbouring mountains. Many were employed at the polishing bench, two on each slab. Others were variously engaged, in finishing, filing, or carving; or in cutting proofs or samples at the wheels; or in working on tobacco-boxes, snuff-boxes, etc. A large warehouse contained the goods they had finished. Some specimens of the several sorts of the marble I brought home. In summer, many of them are employed in sawing without doors; but in winter, they work in rooms: for were they to attempt this work abroad, a sudden frost might endanger the materials, but would certainly render it impossible to use the saw. The pale countenances of the prisoners were a sign that their work was laborious, and that the keeper had the whole profit.

WÜRTZBURG. In the house of correction at Würtzburg were fifty-four men and thirty-six women, employed in a well-regulated woollen manufactory. In one part of the house they were spinning; in another, picking and carding wool; and in another, weaving wide cloth for the soldiers, and also stocking and waistcoat pieces. The wheels were larger than our spinning-wheels, the diameter being four feet. Here, and at most houses of this sort, are large looms, six feet seven inches wide, and two persons work at each loom. In a warehouse, the manufacturer (for all such houses have a manufacturer) showed me several pieces of cloth for the under officers, the artillery, the soldiers,
