yard. The crier might take of a stranger a penny for calling a prisoner to him; and of a complainant two pence for summoning a special committee. For blasphemy, swearing, riot, drunkenness, etc., the committee to fine at discretion: for damaging a lamp, fine a shilling. They were to take from a new-comer, on the first Sunday, besides the two shillings garnish to be spent in wine, one shilling and sixpence to be appropriated to the use of the house.

Common-side prisoners to be confined to their own apartments, and not to associate with these lawmakers, nor to use the same conveniences.

The above was the account of the Fleet before it was burnt by the rioters in 1780. It is rebuilt on the same plan. The floors of the cellar, the hall, and the first story are now stone, and arched with brick. The tapster still has all the cellar-floor. He and several of the prisoners keep dogs, which nuisance should never be permitted in prisons. The billiard and mississippi tables are put down, and the little code of laws abolished. In 1783, from 7 July to 25 Aug., not one prisoner was brought in. Robert Baffan, a crown prisoner, was committed 29 Nov., 1776, and after the fire surrendered himself under the proclamation 17 Nov., 1781, and was here at my last visit. Clauses against spirituous liquors are hung up. Now also is hung up the following table of fees.

POULTRY COMPTER

For master's-side debtors there are about fifteen rooms between the inner and outer gates. For common-side debtors, six wards within the inner gate, two of them on the ground-floor, viz. the King's Ward, in which (1776) were twenty-four debtors; and the Prince's Ward, nine debtors. Above those wards are the Middle Ward, in it were twenty debtors; and the Women's Ward, two debtors. Above them are the Upper Ward, eleven debtors; and the Jews' Ward, four Jew debtors.[1] Near the middle ward, on the same floor, is a close darkish room for the sick. In each ward, a fire-place. In one of the rooms on the second floor (called the pump-room), the debtors have the convenience of water. The rooms are out of repair: but the debtors keep their floors very clean. The court is small,

[1] It were to be wished that in other prisons also, those people had the generous and just indulgence of being kept separate.
