taught reading, writing, and some arithmetic; but not to be clothed, maintained, or lodged in the house. This proposal was not accomplished till the autumn of 1783. The improvement of the sixty new scholars in reading, writing, and behaviour, was so remarkable, and so pleasing, that, in December 1784 a proposal was made to double the number, which was unanimously approved by a full and respectable meeting of the trustees. Two masters now teach one hundred and twenty out-scholars. The salary of the first master is £40, and of the second £25, a year. Hence the expense of each out-scholar is 10s. 10d. a year to the master. The annual expense of each boy in books is 1s. 3½d. and in coals 4½d. A green cap, which costs 1s. 6d. is given to each scholar every year. Hence it appears that the whole annual expense of each out-scholar is 14s. Consequently, more money is bestowed on one in-scholar, than would educate eighteen out-scholars.

"'A good education is now given to thirty in-scholars, and one hundred and twenty out-scholars, which comprehended above one third of all the boys in Chester. The boys are appointed scholars about nine years old, in order to have their instruction completed about the age of going apprentice. When the out-scholars are of two years standing, fifteen of the best are annually elected in-scholars, for two years; and the boys not thus elected remain two years longer in the out-school.

"'It is an interesting truth, which deserves public attention, that two masters can teach one hundred and twenty scholars. At the examination of last April, all the boys who had been two years in the school, though several did not know a letter on their admission, could read and write very well, understood some arithmetic, and had very perfectly learned their Catechism.'

"Having in many of the schools I have visited observed, among other irregularities, the rudeness of the boys, and being persuaded that no instruction is given them relative to a decent and becoming deportment, perhaps hints may be taken for their improvement in this respect from some of the rules of the excellent institution of the Quakers, at Ackworth in Yorkshire, for the education of children of their persuasion, which I here copy.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SCHOOL-MASTERS

"'That the schools, during the summer season, open at half after six o'clock in the morning, and in the winter at half after seven o'clock, and that they close at eight; that after breakfast they open at nine and close at twelve; that after dinner they open at two and close at five. These times to be observed as near as conveniently may be.

"'That they observe that the children come into the schools, when the bell rings, in a quiet and becoming manner, with their faces and hands clean, hair combed, and take their seats at the time appointed.

"'That the boys be instructed in spelling, reading, and English grammar; that after dinner, the boys who attended the writing masters, shall attend the reading masters; and the lads who attended the reading masters, shall attend the writing masters.

"'In order that punishments may be inflicted with coolness and temper, and in proportion to the nature of the offence, the following method is agreed upon, viz. That the treasurer and each master keep a book, and minute down offences committed within the day; that once a week, or oftener, they meet together and inspect these books, and administer such punishments as may be agreed upon, using their endeavours to convince the children that the only purpose of correction is for their amendment, and to deter others from the commission of the like offence.

"'That they sit down with the children and family on first day (Sunday) evening, reading to them, or causing them to read suitable portions of the Holy Scriptures, and other religious books, the treasurer and principal master selecting such parts and subjects as are most instructive, and best adapted to their understandings.

"'That they in particular endeavour, by Divine assistance, to impress upon the minds of the children the necessity of a strict adherence to truth, and abhorrence to falsehood; as well as a remembrance of their Creator in the days of their youth; having the fear of the Lord before their eyes, which will preserve under the various temptations to which they are incident, and lead to the enjoyment of real happiness, by keeping a conscience void of offence towards God and towards man.

GENERAL RULES to be strictly observed by all the Boys at ACKWORTH SCHOOL, and to be read to them once a month

"'That they rise at six o'clock in the morning in the summer, and at seven o'clock in the winter, and dress themselves quietly and orderly, endeavouring to begin the day in the fear of the Lord, which is as a fountain of life preserving from the snares of death.

"'That they wash their faces and hands, and at the ringing of the bell, collect themselves in order, and come decently into the schools; that they take their seats in a becoming manner, without noise or hurry, and begin business when the master shall direct.

"That they refrain from talking and whispering in the school; and, when repeating their lessons to the master, that they speak audibly and distinctly.

"'That they should not be absent from school, nor go out of bounds without leave.

"'That when the bell rings for breakfast, dinner or supper, they collect themselves together in silence, and in due order, having their faces and hands washed, their hair combed, etc., and so proceed quietly into the dining room: and eat their food decently.

"'That they avoid quarrelling, throwing sticks, stones, and dirt, striking or teasing one another; and they are enjoined to complain not of trifles; and when at play to observe moderation and decency.

"'That they neither borrow, lend, buy, nor exchange without leave, and that they strictly avoid gaming of all kinds; that they
